LOCAL NEWS.

There are several new buildings being erected in town.

Lots of fun ahead. The Novelty Combination Troupe will be here next week.

Call and see the immense stock of stove and kitchen furniture at J. H. Hawthorn's.

Work on the new ditch is being pushed rapidly under the supervision of Mr. Cunningham.

The U. P. & O. S. Co. will accept thanks for favors. The proprietary of this company is certainly commendable.

Mr. D. Falk, of the firm of Falk, Ivers & Boise City, has bought out C. W. Allison on Commercial street, opposite the Western hotel.

One hundred men and as many teams have commenced grading on the Oregon Short Line Railroad near the Cliffe House, ten miles below this city.

The post of the M. E. Church in Weiser City gives notice that he will have no services on the third Sunday of this month, the District association holding its session on that day at Main's Creek.

Through kindness of our enterprising friend Mr. Wm. H. Nye, of Boise, we take unpossession of some very agreeable information concerning our beautiful capital city, which we will publish next week.

Ct. A. Wheeler, county will visit Weiser City in the interest of his profession, and will remain one week commencing on the 11th inst. All desiring his services should call between that date and the 18th inst.

Several miners, among whom is Mr. Emery Biggs, are in from the Washington district. They say it is fast a little wintry out there at present, but the boys are all feeling good over the prospects of good times for next season.

W. P. Hudson has purchased the Watkins addition to Weiser City. All persons desiring information in reference to the purchase of lots in that portion of town, should address

W. P. HUDSON,
Weiser City, Idaho.

Kaufman, Haas & Dreyfuss are special salesmen to parties desiring to purchase summer goods. It will pay you to give them a call.

The first quarterly meeting of the M. E. Church for the Weiser circuit will be held on the first Saturday and Sunday of November. All persons and the official board are requested to be present.

WM. T. KOONCE, Pastor.

The races at Boise have been postponed on account of the wet weather. This is to be regretted, as quite a number of thoroughbred horses were expected to be in attendance. It will require at least a week to get the track in good condition again.

We doubt if there is a town west of Wood river, on the line of the U. S. P. R. R., that presents a more promising appearance than our own little city. From what we can learn through official sources, Weiser City is destined to become a railroad center, of no small importance.

Johnnie Smith, the naturalist. It was his intention to be here in time for court, but was not informed of the change of the term at which he was to appear until too late. His efforts in trying to get here on time, show him to be honorable and not afraid to face the result of his trial, whatever that may be.

Mr. S. B. Cope is now receiving from San Francisco a large stock of agricultural implements, such as iron, steel, horse shoes, horse nails, carriage bolts, wagon timber, pitchers and handles, chains, &c. Mr. Cope has ordered only the best of material, and upon the arrival will be prepared to meet the demands of his fast increasing trade to the satisfaction of all.

Change of Firm.

We call the attention of our readers to the notice of this edition of Kaufman, Haas & Dreyfuss' change of firm, which is to be found in another column. By that it will be seen that the firm of Kaufman, Haas & Dreyfuss is no more, but in its stead we have one of the most responsible and reliable firms that has ever transacted business in our town. Mr. Kaufman retires, but the two men who have been so long and favorably known in connection with the house of Messrs. Heilbronner and Ottenheimer, are equal to the task. The two younger members of the firm, Messrs. Burkheimer and Haas, are also well known, having through their business qualities.—Bedrock Democrat.

The Leader takes pleasure in introducing the new firm to the favorable consideration of its readers, and we trust the liberal patronage given the old firm will be extended to the new one. Mr. H. Haas will be in charge of their store at this place, and gentlemen will find him to be a courteous gentleman with whom to do business. The new firm is a host, and has our best wishes for success.

A Question Asked.

Last Friday evening the members of Lower Weed Range gave Mrs. Heidelgant Gallantry a surprise party, on the occasion of her departure for Boise. When the surprisers got to Mr. Black's residence, the home of Mrs. Gallantry's parents, they began to dance and had got through one quadrille set, when one of the number stepped up to one of Mr. Black's rifles hanging on the wall, and pointing a revolver at his head with one hand, while presenting a pair of handcuffs with the other, ordered the man to put them on, saying: You are my prisoner!"

The man did so as was told, and followed the supposed detectives. A couple of hours later Mr. Black's man returned, in company with the detective, and demanded his wages. Mr. Black paid him at once, and the man taking his seat on the horse, slew saddle and started left with the detective. This we then went to a store a couple of miles away, and began drinking freely in the morning the man returned to Mr. Black's, got off, and stated that he had got away from his detective, but had left his horse, saddle and bridle, and everything of value that he had with him. A couple of days later the man started out Boise way, with a pack animal, and passed Jones's on Camas Prairie, the next day.

When the man came back to Black's the morning following his arrest, a party of detectives, armed with rifles and revolvers, started out to capture the alleged detective, which they supposed to be nothing more than a bold thief. After riding a few miles they met him lying in the grass, near the road, and demanded an explanation of his conduct. The alleged detective coolly replied that he was an officer and threatened to blow off the top of any man's head who interfered with him. The engineers thereupon returned home.

The detective's presence at the ball is accounted for in this way: In the afternoon he called on Mr. Brown's house, near Mr. Black's, and asked to be permitted to rest awhile. This request was granted, and he was given a bed, and until morning. At this time he went to the supposed party at Black's, and the balance of the story is known.

The whole affair is considered a good joke for the Slick.

The following advice as to administering food to the sick deserves the attention of nurses and of all who may be called upon to look after nervous patients:

It is a great mistake to have large quantities of fruit, biscuits, &c., placed at a sick room.

A very few grapes, an orange cooled and divided until two or three slices of water ice suffice are quite enough to have displayed at one time.

The food must be neat and of the best. I have often been pained, when visiting some of my sick parishioners, to see the tray with its well-meant contents taken to the bedside, bring large lumps of indigestible compounds, which they dignify with the name of cream, or cakes of heavy dough, which they call bread.

The smallest sight of the food intended to eat there removed it. Whenever it is a case had been instituted upon the appetite, and a small cup of properly prepared soup of the large quantity of meats they probably would have partaken of with pleasure.

Another error, connected with the food of invalids, is to keep back from the patients what they would like if they could take this thing or the other. The sickness, and consequent depression it often such dishes are the cause of people who were recovering from a dangerous illness, when their medical attendants come back to give them up to those responsible for having the disgusting dishes of jellies, relative, I verily believe we should have effect sick just by providing fancy messages of food, displaying dainty dishes, and taking them to patients in this quite unexpectedly.

If she had been asked could she eat anything, I feel confident the answer would have invariably been "Yes, thanks, I don't think I at all minded having eat."

A very simple and expeditious way of cooking a little fish or chicken, so as not to harden or parboil unduly, when the food is to be cooked within the paper, and placed it on the gridiron over a clear fire, very short time. Gentlemen to cook it done thoroughly, and I think often found that to be eaten when all other modes of invalid cookery have been tried in vain.

Sheep Raising.

The sheep industry in the United States is vast and important, and as the consideration of which there are two peculiarly distinct, and at the same time interlocking interests. Mutton as a food is more acceptable since the art of early times grown almost solely for their wool, and with unusual profitableness during the year's increase; but in later times and more so prominently at present, the carcass is looked upon as an important element in sheep husbandry. Mutton as a food is more acceptable since the art of cooking has made it so, and the same grown greatly in popularity, and mutton now stands as one of the most important foods in the superior feeding of sheep. In view of the fact that the mutton is naturally a well-drawing breed, with a tendency of the most and best quality, it is evident that the pure-blood merino, crossed to carry supply our cannot be cross with the material for the finest of woolen goods; on the other hand the Saxon stock the lambs. The sheep for both food and clothe its keeper. It is an important question. What is the best breed of sheep to do this? Undoubtedly not the pure-blooded merino. Though the crossing of the pure-blooded merino on the fine, long and lustrous wool, and the demand for their wool, utilizes the superiority of quantity of the finer goods, it is by the crossing of them with other breeds in which the merino blood predominates predominates that a sheep bred for both meat and wool is produced. The cross-breed is the one in most healthful is to say. The merino is slow of growth and small of size, and remarks the fat in the body till a rapid growth; one that matures early, is a high feeder, and lays on flesh readily, but remarks the fat in the body rather in quantity or quality, a sheep is desired that pays for itself in its wool if prime, and furnishes a good quantity of mutton as a result. Of such character are the breeds of the merino with the Cotswold and the South-down, but with the great mass of American sheepmen the Cotswold, wool is the important product, and here the cross must be with the merino upon the Leicester—a race of sheep which has grown out of a variety of early importations of Bakewell sheep—an intercrossing of various breeds in which many of the good points have been lost. In the field the merino has a great work to do to raise the yield of 4 one, two, or more pounds per head, and give it a higher value.

Several emigrant wagons passed through our town this week.

The Boy That Had a Bag Could Trot.

"So Christopher, you have bought a horse," observed Mr. Grandy, as his only surviving son entered the sanctum sanctorum after his return from a visit to the country.

"Business — oh — business! Well, my dear sir, the fact is, I have been sniffing on something that can't."

"You shouldn't have done it, Christopher," said the old gentleman kindly, "you are not young enough, your bones are set, and you are too fat. You can never be an emperor of the Texas, Christopher. Do you intend to ride or engage in any gymnastics on the animal question?"

"Of course, I only mean that I have been lucky enough to discover something with speed, and have picked it up for a song."

"An old colt?"

"Well, no, not exactly colt; but her pedigree is all down — dam Miss Sparin, sire Signor Botts; own sister to Bones and Ostrology, and half what's before. I only had you the refusal of her afternoon to get drunk."

"I am sorry you have been so imposed upon, my son, but I will endeavor to bear the misfortune with fortitude. Either you or I must be a fool, and as I am generally considered the wisest of the two, I suppose you are the victim. Where is the animal?"

"Oh, I left her in the stable, and I'll have her attended to and dressed. Why, governor, she reminds me of Lucretia Borgia, she is so full of fire and devilment, and yet so gentle withal. She is a beauty, and I'll bet you a hundred dollars that you will be delighted with her when you see her."

"Well, Christopher, I will go and look at her, but in my opinion you have been cheated, and I am afraid you will have to sell her at a sacrifice."

Mr. Grandy, senior, then left the room, followed by his son, and proceeded to the stable, where he found a crowd of boys and men collected around the animal, which was a very fine-looking mare, and which, on the appearance of her master, commenced to neigh and paw the ground in a manner which showed that she was not entirely unacquainted with the habits of the thoroughbred.

"Why, Christopher, she is a splendid animal, and I am glad you have got her. She is a perfect beauty, and I am sure will prove a valuable acquisition to the stud. Now, my son, I will tell you what I will do with you. I will give you a thousand dollars for her, and you can keep the money you have received for her, and I will pay the balance."

"Governor, you are a brick, and I'll bet you a hundred dollars that you will never regret your generosity. I will go and get the money, and will be back in a few minutes."

"Stop, Christopher, stop! Don't be in such a hurry. Let me see her trot. Bring her out, and I will mount her myself."

The mare was brought out, and the old gentleman, who was a splendid horseman, sprang into the saddle, and, after a few preliminary canters, started her off at a full gallop. The mare, which was a splendid animal, soon showed that she was a thoroughbred, and, after a few minutes' gallop, the old gentleman returned, and, dismounting, said, with a complacent smile, "Christopher, you have been cheated. The mare is a splendid animal, and I will not take a thousand dollars for her. I will give you two thousand dollars for her, and you can keep the money you have received for her, and I will pay the balance."

"Governor, you are a brick, and I'll bet you a hundred dollars that you will never regret your generosity. I will go and get the money, and will be back in a few minutes."

Remarkable Hangings.

"A great many people have a mistaken idea that the sensations attendant upon hanging are very unpleasant," remarked Dr. Marble to a representative of this paper yesterday. "But, on the contrary, it is extremely pleasant. I have it from a man who was hanged three times, of course; those whose necks are broken never know what hurt them—but it is of the latter I speak. Drawing has long been regarded, as an unnecessarily agreeable method of shuffling off this mortal coil, and there is no doubt that strangulation by the other method—a hemp rope—produces like results. You remember the great Nashville sensation in which Matt Bindline figured—no, I reckon not, either; for that was my first appearance very much. I believe Bantine, the sensational writer, whose real name is Judson, had a row with a politician named Forrest about the latter's wife. Forrest shot at Judson three times, and was about to fire again, when Judson, as he says, 'drew his revolver and fired the fourth time, the last bullet, like his others, going wide of the mark.' Judson rises his situation with his face and, resting his pistol upon it, took good aim and fired. The ball penetrated Forrest's brain and he fell dead to the ground. Then somebody found Forrest's brother, got a pistol in his hand and told him to avenge the murder. He shot at Judson twenty times, while the latter was running in the capitol stone and myself every shot. The mob finally caught Judson and resolved to hang him. Taking him to a house close by, which was in process of construction, they threw a rope over the rafters and swung him up. Judson was strung up in succession and entertained under the impression that he was dead. He was hauled by the heels and the mob dispersed. The rope left him for dead and kind friends took him and succeeded in restoring life. I saw him afterwards in Louisville, Ky., some time in '68, and had a long talk with him about the affair. He told me that the few moments he hung each time were the most deliciously delightful of his whole life. Beautiful sights danced before his eyes, of all hues and shades, many of them like those produced by the chemical bursting of watch-springs. The most gorgeous sights passed in review before him, each more entrancingly beautiful and diverse, than the last. Exquisite landscapes, snow-capped mountains, green-clad valleys and sporting streams of sparkling water filled him with ecstasy. His whole soul was enthralled with raptures by the beauties which lay spread out before his gaze. So wrapped up was he in contemplating these scenes that he heard the moment the rope was severed and the sweet illusions dispelled. The pain came afterward, when his throat swelled from the effects of the rope upon it, and he was unable to swallow. I saw a man hanged on circumstantial evidence once;" the doctor obtained, "and I have wanted the proof mighty strong ever since. Some time in 1840 or 1842 two men, J. B. Clinton and L. G. Davis, emigrated from Dudley, Stanford, K. Y., to the country between McMinnville and Woodbury, in Warren county, Tenn. They were bosom friends, and what belonged to one was at the disposal of the other. Clinton was the banker of the two, however, and accumulated a good deal of money. He started out one day to collect a debt of some $9000, and told Davis if it Clinton did his money and started home with it. He was seen about dusk, sitting on his horse in the road, about a mile from home, talking to David, but was never heard of afterward, until his body was found in the bed of a dry branch the following spring. David was arrested and hung for the murder on the circumstances related. A certain Steven, becoming very much interested in the case, and reading all Irish circles the whole of his confinement. He was with him to the scaffold and relieved him that Davis denied the guilt to the very last. About twelve years after Davis was hung Browning was taken very ill and his physicians made him prepare for death. He sent for a near friend of Clinton's acknowledged that he had murdered and robbed him of his money. He died an awful death.

"Even in even a worse character is peddling business than book agents, lightning-rod men and mysterious characters who talk in whispers and ask the legends was promulgated or fall stakes, in order to enable them to and so on. People who paint new roofs from the agricultural office and find a crop of some old familiar kind instead of the expected carrot, have a good cause of complaint, and those who buy old time rose underwear among find they smell in every mile, the new to the old fame, though the buyers have been fleeced out of small sums to purchase them. Also the tree peddler, who bears the name, not of fame, but of wickedness, and who sold old varieties, adapted to the soil and climate, and good fruit-bearers the sell-child to barren soil; this is notion the case. To such a man a little orchard must be one of the scenes of the Garden. He lives the equivalence of it. In Iowa and Illinois are found thousands of these rude of itinerant offenders, who, if they required to give security for the honesty of their transactions, would be found utter bankrupts. Some of these peddlers have been found to be men of education and refinement, who have taken to the business for the excitement of it. Such men are generally found to be good talkers, and can make a plausible story about anything. Stick to the old reliable nurseries, and you will be safe."

A Famous Wedding.

In October, 1869, Miss Frances Amelia Burdett was married in New York to Don Criedo, a rich Cuban gentleman. Probably no marriage ever performed before or since in the United States was so picturesque in its every detail as the one that joined these two people. The president is recalled as this time by the second marriage of his lady, her first husband having died twelve years ago. A description of the trousseau seen and incidents attending the nuptials of 1869 will be interesting reading, and the fact that Lieut. U. A. Burdett, the bride's father was the gallant aide-de-camp of President Grant, will add somewhat to that interest.

Miss Burdett was very beautiful, and her first husband, a gallant officer, undisputed belle of New York. Tall and dignified, with a fair complexion and light blue eyes, her friends said positively proud, but possessed a resemblance to the Empress Eugenie, of France. In January, 1869, Miss Burdett, the bride's father, was the Estebian Santa Cruz de Oviedo. He was fifty-five years old, swarthy as a mulatto, with a decided cast of the Cuban. The terms of their love was of smooth and strong until the Cuban Don was stricken down with typhoid fever, and for St. Nicholas Hotel. Through a wearing illness she faithfully nursed him back to health. As her life caused the minds of the affianced pair were absorbed in the preparations for their wedding. The daily papers teemed with minute details of the fabulous amounts expended. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were disbursed by the Cuban with lavish prodigality. The trousseau at A. T. Stewart's was said to have cost fifty thousand dollars, and much was expended at Genin's and at Ball & Black's. The wedding dress cost six thousand dollars, and was brought from Paris. Tiffany's ushers were pressed to the extent of fifty thousand dollars also. The silver was received wheel on October 19, 1869, Don Esteban was married to Miss Burdett. The bride had previously adopted the Roman Catholic faith of her husband, and the ceremony was performed by Archbishop Hughes, in St. Patrick's Cathedral. Crowds gathered in the Cathedral square before the ceremony, until finally five thousand people were present, and, double their number filled the streets outside. Eddie fainted in the crush and had to be carried away. The bishop's voice could not be heard in the confusion. The bride's dress was of white satin, and an elegant veil of point lace extended from her head to her feet, and beyond. Her hair was of pleasing adorned with pearls and diamonds, and four rows of orient pearls, inclosed her throat, and were held in front by a clasp of diamonds. Her earrings were two immense pearls, and her bracelets of diamonds and pearls matched the same. The pelion had to guard the house. The bride of the groom to the bride were of extraordinary value, among them being eighty different dresses.

Frightful Fate Foretold.

The three-card monte trick is the latest American swindle introduced on the British railroads. One afternoon recently seventeen Englishmen took seats in a Great Eastern Railway carriage on the way to London, and noticed that a well-dressed man
