Footlight Flickers
The footlight flickers of the stage are not so bright as they once were. The old-time footlights were made of tallow and burned with a steady, warm glow. But now they are made of gas and burn with a bright, cold light. The change has been made for the sake of economy and convenience. The old-time footlights were expensive and difficult to maintain. The new gas footlights are cheap and easy to use. They are also more durable and last longer. The change is a good one, and it is only a matter of time before the old-time footlights will be completely forgotten.

By FRANCIS LINDY

It was a dark, stormy night, and the rain fell in heavy, slanting sheets against the windows of the old, creaking house. The fire in the grate was low, and the shadows were deep and black.

"What a night!" he muttered, looking out at the darkness. The wind howled through the trees, and the rain pattered against the roof like a thousand tiny drums.

He turned away from the window, his face grimed with the cold. The room was dimly lit, and the air was thick with the smell of old wood and damp earth.

"Where is she?" he asked, his voice hoarse from disuse. The silence answered him, a heavy, oppressive silence that seemed to press down upon him.

He paced the floor, his feet making soft, muffled sounds on the worn carpet. The clock on the wall ticked slowly, its hands pointing to a time that felt like a lifetime ago.

"Come back," he called, his voice breaking. "Come back to me, please. I need you. I need you so much that I can't think of anything else."

The door opened, and a soft light spilled into the room. A woman in a dark dress and bonnet stepped out, her face pale and her eyes filled with a look of despair.

He looked at her, his heart pounding in his chest. She was the same as he remembered her, yet so different, so changed by the years and the hardships of life.

"What are you doing here?" he asked, his voice low and intense. She looked at him, her expression one of pain and longing.

"I've come back to you," she said, her voice trembling. "I've been so far away, but I've found my way home. I've found you."

He reached out, his hand touching hers. The warmth of her skin was a shock to him, a reminder of the love they once shared and the years that had passed since they last saw each other.

"I'm so glad to see you," he said, his voice filled with relief. "I've missed you so much. I've missed you every day, every hour, every minute."

She smiled at him, a smile that was both sad and happy. "I've missed you too, and I've missed the life we once had together. I've missed the days when we were young and full of hope."

He pulled her close, his arms around her. She rested her head against his chest, and he felt a sense of peace that he had never known before. In that moment, all the pain and the years were forgotten.

"I'll never let you go again," he whispered into her hair. "I'll never let you go again. You're home now, and you're safe."

The rain continued to fall, but the storm seemed to have passed. The wind had died down, and the rain fell in a steady, soothing rhythm.

He looked at her, his eyes filled with love and devotion. She looked back at him, her eyes shining with tears. They were both so happy, so content in each other's arms.

"I love you," he said, his voice soft and tender. "I love you more than anything in the world. I love you more than my own life."

She smiled at him, her face glowing with happiness. "I love you too, and I'll love you forever. I'll love you until the day I die."

He kissed her forehead, his lips touching hers. She closed her eyes, and he felt a sense of bliss that he had never known before. In that moment, he knew that he had found his home.

"I'll never let you go again," he whispered into her hair. "I'll never let you go again. You're home now, and you're safe."
