THE Masquerader

By KATHERINE CECIL THURSTON.
Copyright, 1909, by Harlow & Bradshaw

CHAPTER I.

It was a brilliant day, the sun shined in all its glory, and the birds were singing sweetly in the trees. The Masquerader, who was a young man of about twenty years of age, was walking along the beach, looking at the people who were walking about in various costumes. He was a handsome young man, with a well-cut figure, and he was walking in a leisurely way, as if he were not in a hurry. He was looking at the people with a curious expression on his face, and he was wondering what they were doing. He had never seen such a thing before, and he was very interested in it.

As he walked, he saw a young woman who was dressed in a very strange costume. She was wearing a long, flowing dress of a pale color, and she had her hair done up in a very unusual way. She was walking with a graceful, easy gait, and she was looking at the Masquerader with a curious expression on her face. He was looking at her with a curious expression on his face, and he was wondering what she was doing.

He saw other people who were dressed in various costumes, and he was very interested in them. He saw a man who was dressed in a very old-fashioned suit, and he was walking with a very stiff, military gait. He saw a woman who was dressed in a very fashionable, modern costume, and she was walking with a very graceful, easy gait. He saw a man who was dressed in a very strange costume, and he was walking with a very peculiar gait.

He was walking along the beach, and he was looking at the people with a curious expression on his face. He was wondering what they were doing, and he was very interested in them. He saw a young woman who was dressed in a very strange costume, and he was walking with a graceful, easy gait. He was looking at her with a curious expression on his face, and he was wondering what she was doing.

DOCTORS' MISTAKE

"The doctor's mistake was to take a young man for a young woman," said the old man who was sitting on the bench. "He was very mistaken indeed, and he was very foolish to do so." The young man was looking at the old man with a curious expression on his face, and he was wondering what he was doing.
