WASHINGTON NEWS LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Signs of consolidation on the part of the Republicans in congress who did not work harmoniously in the last campaign are nothing unother. The breach between the factions is closing, and there is promise of a united party by next fall. This is not a forecast, but a statement of a condition which is readily becoming apparent. The statements issued recently by Senator Root of New York, and Senator Crane of Massachusetts, as suggested by Hadley, Borah, Cummins and other Progressives, favoring the calling of a national convention later in the year, at which certain important causes of past dissension were to be considered and remedied, is the latest evidence of the desire on the part of the harmony movement.

Only four senators acted at the harmony dinner, namely: Dixon, Montana; Nelson, Minnesota; Clapp, Minnesota, and Poindexter, Washington. Dixon is chairman of the Progressive national committee, but seems to be a member on March 4. But such Progressive Republicans as Borah, Cummins, Kenyon and others, refuse the movement.

Senator Borah was especially pleased with the developments of the harmony movement, and said that his state would continue to vote Republican. Harris Weinstock is the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt as a step toward harmony with the Republican conservatives and radicals with them working together for the establishment of a third party, which will be a real national party of about equal size and will contain some elements of Roosevelt, Taft, Democratic and Republican conservatives, and Republican and LaFollette radicals. All things now have been getting ready in calm harmony. The progress they adopted for the remainder of the session committed their progressive followers which LaFollette and Bourne bitterly and one of which Democrats of North Dakota, Gudger and Hamill is the author. One of these progressive provisos for the physical valuation of railroads, which the Democratic committee, committee has favorably reported, and which Lafollette has been advocating for many years.

Now for the purpose of the men who are working for harmony in the house. They expect to hear from the country and measure the sentiment in favor of reorganization along the lines indicated before such a committee as is proposed is called.

The senate committee on public lands has reported favorably on Representative Francis bill, providing for the selection of the state of Idaho lands within phosphate withdrawals in the state of Idaho, and for exchange of land to certain interested persons upon the coast of Alaska recommends. The phosphate bill was called up in the senate and was immediately passed.

Many members of the Idaho delegation in congress has just received an invitation from the Commercial club at Twin Falls to attend its annual Potato Breakfast. Aside from sending the invitation, the Commercial club sent by parcels post to each member, a large potato, indicating one of the great resources of Twin Falls section.

Representative Francis has presented to the committee on memorials of the state of Idaho, supporting an appropriation in the legislative bill for the relief of homesteaders of the northern section of Idaho and the border sections of the northwest states.

Mr. Francis's bill is before the committee on public lands on this subject, and he and other members from the 11 western states will receive from the west are urging the passage of the same at the earliest moment.

For Fireside Ship.

SALEM, Ore., Feb. 25.—A memorial asking congress to preserve the old battleship Oregon and to turn it over to the Oregon naval militia as a practice ship has been forwarded to the Oregon delegation at Washington. A memorial presented in the legislature was passed unanimously.

Flat vs. Picket.

PORTLAND, Feb. 25.—Resenting the audacity of two masked highwaymen who threat a revolver in his face, Henry Wiprel took a senseless shot at the men holding the weapon and fled. The holdups were not molested in follow.

ONE REMEDY FOR TOO MUCH SPENT

The question foremost in the mind of every careful housewife is how to dodge the high cost of living.

This question is one in which the head of every household is interested.

It is the one burning question of the present time.

The one idea is to be able to get the best value for the money you spend—to be able to make a dollar go as far as possible—it is and should be a matter for serious thought.

As a helpful hint, a comic-ical comedy, allow us to suggest that you carefully peruse the columns of the WEISER DAILY SIGNAL each evening. Its columns are filled with suggestions for the thrifty.

The advertisements tell you where you can purchase everything from calicos to collars and articles of all kinds at prices in which the dollar will go the limit.

Read the WEISER DAILY SIGNAL every evening closely and constantly and find the message the merchant who wants your trade is sending to you.

In this manner you will be benefited to the fullest extent. In this way you will be sure to get each penny's worth in each dollar.

Woman Held Wife Slave.

PORTLAND, Feb. 25.—If the present case is maintained, the case of Portland will say who is to be the mayor of the city at the June election. Up to date 1200 women have registered while only 231 men have attired their signatures to the county clerk's books. At the June election the women of Portland will have their first opportunity to exercise franchises, which they secured at the November general election.

Honk! Honk! The Honk.

OREGON, Ore., Feb. 25.—Honk are in this vicinity are doing strenuously. The Weiser Weekly Signal has been advertising for many months. Some of the people feel that aside from talking honk, they will be time saves in the busy season when autos are needed for the pleasurers or in trips from one town to another.

Will Swap 18 Ins.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 25.—Hold Anderson, the Yankee Wonder, 18 hands high, and Primble Biscuit of New Orleans will meet in the Vernon arena, March 4 or 18, according to which date Promoter McGarry gets matched. Primble has consented to scale 133 pounds, the weight Anderson demanded.

CURIOUS BURIAL CUSTOM.

The Pinochuis Tombs in Use in the Canaries of Spain.

A rather curious and to our ideas somewhat unsightly custom obtains in Spanish communities. All around the cemetery are small tombs, the general colour of which is only to be compared to that of a nest of pigeonholes, often in a position of similar height, and of the same general appearance. These tombs are

MEXICAN GIBATTING.

The assassination of Madero gives some insight into the character of the average Mexican, and it would seem to make but little difference whether the gun-firing man comes from the higher class or from among the scoundrels. That any treachery, and plot but little thought or premeditation, could be a few short weeks ago Felix Diaz and the leader of Madero and his party was only worth a farthing cannot be denied while it is. He was rehoused from prison and allowed to build a force, which meant he would immediately become further trouble for the general. It like by way of encouragement the bandits and murderers that were overthrown not thereby gain prestige. The ladies were turned, and Madero was at the mercy of his former prisoner. He was slaughtered at the hand of night, the exact wording of which will be given out later. Madero may have had his faults, but he must have had some of the elements of a patriot and statesman, else has the instincts of the genuine

MORGAN'S STEADING SCORE.

When John Pierpont Morgan was before the money trust investigating committee of the house of representatives, he made very clear the distinction between the credit that rests upon character. We have been told by the great wording of Mr. Morgan's cannot sensational answers to questions asked him in that committee, and do so as follows:

Q. How much credit has Cowen with money? A. No, sir.

Q. Is he to credited? A. No, sir, not character.

Q. So that the banks of New York would have the same credit, and if you owned them you would have the same control of credit as if you had any money, would you not, etc.? I have lots of time—business men—to see borrow any amount, whose credit is unquestioned.

Q. Is that not so because it is believed that they have the money each of them? A. No, sir. It is because people believe in the man.

Q. And it is regardless of whether he has any financial backing at all, is it? A. It is, very often.

Q. And he might not be worth nothing? A. He might not have nothing. I have known men to come into my office, and I have given him a check for $1,000,000 when I say they had not a cent in the world.

Q. There are not many of them? A. Yes; a good many.

Q. You wouldn't like to have a character such or would enable him to draw largely a check for $1,000,000? A. If he hadn't a cent in the world?

Old St. Louis Going Some.

One is apt to look to New York for great things, especially in the line of building. The great gain city has long been famed for its skyscrapers and no such new structure has been announced it has been backed upon as the acme in the way of novelty and novelty as well as towering height. It seems the great metropolis must look well to its laurels in the future as a rival has taken the field in the "great industries of our wonderful country." Now comes St. Louis with a claim to the highest building in the world. It is not as tall or the latest production from New York architects, but as a whole is larger and cost more money. A St. Louis publication gives the following comparisons, figures:

Two notable structures that will be added to the world's famous buildings will be those of the Woolworth building in New York and the Woolworth building of St. Louis and the Woolworth building of New York. The Woolworth building will be completed in several months and the New building is scheduled to be finished in April.

In certain features these buildings surpass each other but on the whole one is about as remarkable as the other.

The Woolworth building is 750 feet—55 stories—high, while the New Building is—also 55 feet, in height, from the foundation to roof line of the post house, and has 21 floors.

While the Woolworth building is the tallest office building in the world the New Building is the largest, under one roof. The new building will cost $15,000,000, while $15,500,000 is the value of the New York structure.

Cowen Rules Block.

The New Building covers an entire city block. Its foundation walls 375,000,000 pounds, and to support this enormous weight the builders sunk 2,176 pilings, 40 feet long, 70 feet below the street level to bedrock.

It has two entrances, fifty-six feet wide, one on Olive street and one on Locust street, for the use of office tenants. Nineteen elevators will give service to the office floors, which will have an average each of 745 offices to a floor. The floor space of the entire building is thirty acres. There will be a total of thirty-eight elevators and four escalators, the latter connecting each day being not more than 5,000 persons each day being not more than 5,000 persons each day being not more than 5,000 persons
