JACK SHIFFER DROWNED IN TREACHEROUS SALMON

Falls From a Bridge Being Built and Was Swept Away—Body Was Recovered.

A special to the Signal, from Meadows of the 22nd says:

News has reached here of the drowning of Jack Shiffer in the south fork of the Salmon, about 12 miles from Meadows, on March 20. Heard some other men had been engaged in constructing a bridge, when he fell from the timbers and before his companions could reach him he had drowned. The remains were recovered from the stream and were burned on the banks of the south fork on Saturday.

Mr. Shiffer was proprietor of the well-known "Shiffer Ranch" near Warren and was well known and liked throughout this section.

To Test Voter Votings.

Last Saturday noon at the home of Mrs. Cha or Stat Commercial street Henry L. Hancock and Mrs. Ida Hamon, both of Weiser, were united in marriage by Rev. Burt. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Hancock left for their future home near Malheur City, Oregon, where they own a ranch.

Sunday morning at 9:30 o'clock in the M. E. parsonage in this city, Clarence O. Thorne and Miss Lelia N. Osborne, both of Yale, were united in marriage, Rev. W. W. Burt officiating. Soon after the ceremony the happy people embarked to their Oregon home. The groom is well known in this city where he formerly resided, and his bride is a popular young lady of Malheur county, and a miss quite well known here, having for some time taught in the Haworth school just across the river.

A STORY OF THACKERAY.

How He Changed a Country Night From Tears to Cheerer.

Thackeray was delighting us at a story sitter. One evening I remember meeting, we gave a dinner party to him house. I was allowed to sit up till 9:30 o'clock. Dinner in those days was at 6:30. When the party went into the drawing room I was taken to my own sitter Thackeray was in possession of a couch opposite the fireplace. I remember sitting on it my self, I remember sitting on it by the side of my self, and I remember sitting on it by the side of my self, and I remember sitting on it by the side of my self, and

FARRAR, THE WAIF

(Copyright, 1901, by Richard B. Harlow.)

Farrar had never before numbered fifty-seven years among his friends. Miss Curtis had taken charge of the Farrar old Pond home in the latter end of January when he spent his summons Farrar had ordered a new upholstered for the occasion.

Nevertheless he had hesitated. Children of the front-yard fruit variety and others of the back-yard vegetable kind seldom child" size in '03s were to answer their silence and bring people's names into their mouths by calling him the "old man." Farrar was dated to front of a growing responsible.

Farrar had responded to the invitation because Miss Curtis had written him a personal letter. She had called on him at the office on the fifty-or more occasions was dated a day from below the plain and he had suggested that the hours be changed to the people outside the town.

But with the advent of Miss Curtis Farrar's attitude underwent a sudden and thorough change. From the time said he laid eyes on her young natural hair he was dated his 3rd child eyes—all the eyes at the postoffice—with the exception of her young brother, who stared in
