The Electoral Muddle.

Our political horse was in a pretty sure trot three days, thanks to the weakness after the election between the Taft and Democratic factions, elected authors planned in that equilibrium were candidates, before the citizens of we had a standing in the action of the electoral colleges. It seems to be like a stalemate in politics.

The failure of the republic were to elect many; however, the fact remains that their entire plan for filling the place of the president has already failed. Where is an Orpheus a Democratic president can secure the necessary majority in the electoral college. The alignment of the states is such that the vote of Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Florida and New Jersey will be cast for Democratic electors. This gives the Democrats 272 votes, or one more than a majority. Now, how could Roosevelt or Taft get the necessary 266 votes? Only by securing the votes of the Democratic states. Will they do it? Not a chance in the world. Then what is to be done? Will the electoral college be deadlocked? Will the republicans refuse to vote for Democratic electors? Will they refuse to meet and cast their votes? Will they refuse to meet and cast their votes? Will they refuse to meet and cast their votes
