Grand Junction Valley Challenges Idaho.

The Grand Junction, Colorado, commercial and agricultural body has challenged Idaho to an exhibit at the United States Land & Irrigation Congress at Chicago next December. Steven Grubb, irrigation secretary and land agent for the Oregon Short Line Railroad, has taken up the proposition for Idaho, and will issue immediate announcements for preliminary assemblies.

Thomas Mahoney, secretary of the Grand Junction Chamber of Commerce, challenged Mr Grubb to make the exhibit. Mahoney says Grand Junction valley will make Idaho ashamed she has so small an exhibit in the building. The question is, will she? We believe that exhibits of fruit and agricultural products will

She Cornered Him.

The saintly Casher (Kansas) Pioneer prints this story, which has been floating around the Kansas papers for some time:

A young man, home hard up passed his dress suit. When his finances were in better shape, he decided to cancel against the suit on the pawnshop ticket. "Say, sir," he said, "what is that?" The pawnman explained that he had attended a dance, and, the dance being over early, the man took off his coat. The ticket was pinned on the coat in the room room. "Oh, I see," he said. "Then the pawnbroker found a similar tag in the pantaloons. "Say, sir," he said, generally, "what sort of a dance was that?"

It does not take the voters of the county to begin work on the reser- dam this fall in order that it be completed before the winds ce sets in.

Thinking men or woman can realize the immediate benefit will result to their vouches and e entire country by the reclama- and irrigation of their lands. hich what it means to have 00 or more acres of land under ly irrigation- acres of this ch. In the Sunnyside district e is more than 3000 acres of 6000 acres of which is accessi- of irrigation and will no placed water; in the Crane creek dis- there is 5000 acres of land, than 3000 acres of which will no doubt carry a responsibi- tion that sooner the lands be relin- quished by the state land board in favor [illegible] certain of the settlers, and the remainder of the land re- verted to the state.

The commission examined 100 applications and land evidence from witnesses in regard to their claims, and made a personal inspection of each homestead. To do this required traveling on horseback over 350 miles over mountain trails, in many places simply cattle through the timber, through which on account of its dusty the commission was compelled to travel in single file Mr. Pennbaker stated that the timber was the finest and largest he had ever seen in the west. In some instances where the settlers had not been the time to make exercises for agricultural purposes, the timber was shut down compiled so much space that the settlers was at a loss to know what to do with it.

The commission found from evidences given by the settlers that the conduct of the general land office is to blame for the land being settled. The land was filed on during the administration of Gov. Hunt, by the state, and the owners filed with the government land office, but no action was ever given entries of the state claiming the land, but their claims were accepted and their money received by the land office, but after lying on said entries for years it became void. The settlers appealed from the decision of the local land office to the commissioner of the general land office, who also turned them down. They then appealed to the secretary for justice, with the result that a commission was appointed to settle their grievance.

Mrs. Pennbaker announced her intention to send all the notes of information to the various notices of the district, calling homeland the entire attention.

She closed the outing.

A Narrow Escape.

Mrs. M. E. Berkwith and little daughter Marion, had a narrow escape from death or serious injury Thursday afternoon while driving down state street. When just opposite the Vandoren Barber shop they were met by Earl Johnson who was driving his high spirited horse, Johnson's horse got off on somewhat of a run and collided with the Berkwith rig in front of the Vandoren shop. The wheel of the buggy was over the girl's lap, bruising it somewhat, but fortunately not breaking any bones. Had it not been for a number of bystanders who came to the aid of the women and the child they would probably have been killed. It is almost a miracle that they escaped without serious injury.

Butterfield Live Stock Company Exhibits of Sheep at Portland the Whole Show---Will Go to Seattle and Boise.

The Butterfield Live Stock company, of this city, is certainly going some with their exhibit of thoroughbred sheep at the Portland Interstate. Seventy of the finest sheep to be found in America are being exhibited there by the Butterfield company. The sheep will be taken from Portland to Seattle, where they will be exhibited in the big stock show there, and that they will repeat their victories of Portland goes without the saying. The Ben Snook of Boise Interstate Fair at Boise. In reference to the prizes won by the company at Portland, The Oregonian, of the 22d says:

The judging of sheep was first completed to several of the sheep competition was held. For Scotch Merinos there was no competition, the Butterfield Land & Stock company, of Weiser, Idaho, capturing all premiums.

In the Butterfield company, of Weiser, with the bulk of the awards for themselves, that firm cutting eight firsts and five second places. Ed Schout, of Albion, got one second and five third places.

When it came to Southdowns, the Butterfield company was headed by E. H. Jenkins, of Dayton, Wash. Jenkins got six first places, four second and three third, while the Idaho company got three first, five second and three third awards.

Riddell & Son and the Butterfield company are the competitors in the class for Lincolns, the Idaho concern leading with eight first, four second and three third places, while the Nuttleman stockmen have three first awards, four second and two third.

Pennyside Another Hot Precinct.

At the election held Tuesday in Pennyside precinct, to the local viewers at that district to determine whether they wanted water on their land or not, they hollered by their votes that they wanted it and they wanted it bad. Sixty five votes were cast---65 of which were in favor of water and 3 against. This all the opposition that developed at the time of the granting of the petition by the commissioners for the organization of the district, which is of late date. When the people set down and began to think over the importance of the proposition, they realized what it meant to them, and almost to a person, they voted for it. It speaks well for the intelligence and progressiveness of the people of the two sections who have petitioned that they are in favor of the new order of things and are asking for old rules and the old methods.

Rekey Race Called Off.

Owing to the sentence to the first car to the big rekey race from Philadelphia to Seattle, in which the newspaper was killed and several other persons injured, the race has been called off. The following notice was received by the editor of The Signal who was to accompany the relay car from Weiser to Baker City, as the representative of the Philadelphia Press from that journal:

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 15, 1909.

Mr. A. A. Brown,
The Signal,
Weiser, Idaho.

Dear Sir:---

The automobile relay race has been called off and abandoned owing to the fatal accident in the Press messenger. The last car left St. Louis with a few miles outside of Bedford and H. L. Bookler, the messenger, received injuries which resulted in his death.

We thank you for your interest and services to what we had hoped to be a most notable automobile and which had such a lamentable ending.

Yours truly,
THE PRESS.

A Courtesy to the State.

The hospitality extended by Premier Mackinzie, of British Columbia, to Gov Brady and his staff, to visit Victoria, B. C., was a courtesy to the entire state of Idaho. The invitation was cordially informed, but the trip was greatly enjoyed by the governor and his staff, and every courtesy was shown them in the beautiful city of Victoria. The party was shown through the parliament buildings and given an automobile ride over the city. Members of the party speak in the highest terms of praise of the many courtesies extended them at the exposition by the officials as Idaho day, and every thing that was possible was done to make their visit a pleasant and enjoyable one.

STATE RELIC TO BE PRESERVED

Old State House Near Meadows to be Taken Care of by Historical Society---Site of First Republican Convention.

At the recent session of the state historical society in Meadows, the state will eventually obtain possession of a valuable historic relic in the shape of a log cabin, the building in which the first two republican conventions of Idaho territory were held. The cabin was built in 1862 by "Parker John," says the Statesman.

The Women's club of Meadows had written Mr. Hailey asking him to come to Meadows, and take some steps to permanently save this historic building for the state. A year ago the building, which is in a bad state of preservation, was about to be torn down, when the women of Meadow interested and saved the building for the time being, but they felt that it would only be a matter of a short period when it would fall into [illegible] unless saved for all time.

In response to repeated invitations, Mr. Hailey left for Meadows on Saturday last, where he was met by a delegation of the club, who addressed him. Saturday afternoon Mr. Hailey was driven out to the old cabin on Crane creek which had been the scene of the stormy conventions, over Gen. Lyon- Wallace and Gen Jodge Parks had been acquainted as delegates to congress in '63 and '64.

After the evening meeting, at which Mr. Hailey spoke as only he can on the early life of the territorial days, the entire assembly marched down to the home of Mr. McMahon, also in the early days, had been an enclosure of Mr. Hailey, where an elaborate spread was served. The next morning Mr. Hailey had an interview with Gov. Brady, the result of which [illegible]

LAND OFFICE IS GIVEN THE BLAME

Marble Creek Controversy Laid at Door of Commissioner of Land Office.

"The facts of the matter are that the controversy between the state and settlers in the Marble creek country is due to negligence on the part of the commissioner of the general office in not notifying subordinate officers and they in turn notifying the citizens and prospective settlers in that vicinity of the state's selection of the land.

"There is no question but that a great many people went in there innocently, because before making filing in many instances they conferred with attorneys and certain advise relative to filing on such lands. The reason for this was on account of the Northern Pacific certificates which was then being used on many of the land, the attorneys advising prospective settlers to file where the lands had not been used on the lands in question." says the Capital News.

Such was the substance of a statement made today by George A. Day state land commissioner and ably one of the commissioners appointed to investigate the claims of settlers in the Marble creek country, who returned home today from northern Idaho where he has been in company with Senator A. L. Freebatter of Washington county and Representatives E. R. Harris of Fremont county, the other two members of the commission, for the past six weeks. The report of the commission will be presented within the next 10 to 20 days and submitted to the state board of land commissioners which by the resolution passed at the last session of the Idaho legislature is instructed to take action with reference to the claims of settlers to lands as adverse to the state selection of such lands.

The commission was last session at Carroll for the sworn testimony of dozen of settlers residing in Shoshone county, two weeks being devoted to this work and the same method will be followed in the taking of testimony from the Clarkia, Mr. Asquith's fear of these lumbermen lumbermen to be no means a finished or all factored apprehension. They have attended the windows of his official residence in Downing street. The have joined into alliance members of his cabinet who tried to make petite speeches. Alarming Spread of Pellagra.

The whole country has reason to be interested in the spread of the dread disease known as pellagra. News dispatches related yesterday tell of the existence of 1000 cases in North Carolina and of the decision of the Tennessee state board of health to include all people suffering from the disease on the presumption that it is contagious, says the Spokesman-Review.

Pellagra is found in some parts of Europe, particularly in northern Italy, and it has been known in our southern states for many years. Only of late, however, has it threatened to spread to any considerable extent. Northern states need not suppose that they will not be infected, for an official of the United States marine hospital service has just reported the discovery of 50 cases in the Illinois insane asylum.

The disease is lingering and painful. Its chief symptom is a violent skin eruption, accompanied by severe constitutional and nervous disturbances. Instances of recovery are very few. Of 21 people recently found to have contracted pellagra at Durham, N. C., nine have died, and another death is expected within the week.

"He told us about an early patient of his, a man who dosed himself with about a half a rock of pills and two or three gallons of quack medicine every week.

"There was nothing the matter with the fool, but all this silly medicine swilling, and Dr. Wolf told him so, but it did no good.

A GREAT MAN GONE.

The death of Governor Johnson of Minnesota removes from public life one of the greatest, sincerest and most brilliant of the public men of our day.

Were a weaker woman's cot to the disheartened cloak is an soldier's ment of no ordinary man. And to even stand opposed in the race for the nomination for the office of president of the United States is one of the greatest honors that can come to a citizen of the United States.

Although Governor Johnson was not in all things to harmony with the political views of this paper we cannot close our eyes, and would not if we could, to the fact that every motive of the man was actuated by a fond desire to be of service to his fellow men. In all his official acts he recognized he a spirit of duty, political integrity and rugged honesty. Here, like Lincoln, perhaps, this our public man who has filled alone the day of the restored nation. In his own state he has been a political idol, with a party majority against him of from 60,000 to 100,000 votes by his three times been overwhelmingly elected to the office of governor. His neighbors appreciated his worth, his manhood, his integrity, his rugged honor. Not in his political life alone did his sterling and sole equal to the people, but knowing over his political glory and a achievements throughout his life was his selfless. That she was a worker across whom he was a had never bespoke for in his stead, and as he rose to statesh around some six-footer or in his mother was specially marked.

It is glorious to live in a democracy where by work, honor, perseverance and push the humblest boy may look to the presidency, where merit has its own reward.

In the death of Governor Johnson the nation loses one of its brightest political lights, the state of Minnesota its most revered son, a wife loses a devoted, nigbly loyal devoted husband. His monument should bear the epitaph, "Humanity—by better because he lived."

PROSPERITY FOR WEISER.

It is easy to predict a prosperous future for Weiser if the constructive energy of its people is applied in the right direction. Nature has done her part in providing the resources, and it will require only the co-operation of the people to develop them. Weiser is in a position to become the metropolis of a large and rich territory, and the trade of this territory should be centered here. Every dollar that is spent in Weiser helps to build up the city, and every dollar that is sent away helps to build up some other city. Weiser merchants are prepared to meet the prices of any competitor, and they are entitled to the support of the people. Tears fell from his eyes, burning tears, the cause of which neared his soul. He held her tenderly beside the water's edge, and, bathing her head and shoulders in the cool of the pure stream, he set to chafing her hands and her face, exercising every art of which he was capable. He spoke, and spoke again. He burst in song to stir her senses.

Sneaked above a stocky brown sheet, then back at the crowd to find Bethel and whose life was forfeit under the law. There was a queer light in his eyes.

"I know him now, Pelton. We've met before. You and I, in the center, and the two boys will pick him up. Come!" Nels tugged at his wrist, for their object was to prevent, if possible, any more bleeding among a handful of beauty and excitement which, centered in the man in the ring, had aroused all the fighting blood in the audience.

"Jesus," he groaned. "We got to have blankets over this! Couch runs a good thing. But how much more, my head? I can't see plain for all that cut on them boots some."

"I've got more out here. I'll make a stretcher out of this." turned brusquely. "Either you come or you don't. I'm not going to stand here and argue with you. Come on!"

"Yes, I'll come," said Pelton, "but I'm not going to help you. You must have misunderstood me. I'm not going to help you."

"We will if he dies just long enough for my dog and you to run. You will now Nels."

The girl watched her lover guide Hamilton up to the level of the woods, then disappear with him in the fog, and was relieved to see the two Indians follow. Pelton made no offer to help her, for he had found by instinct that Nelson might have to be carried through the brush by two men, and he knew that if he were to be of any use he must husband his strength.

Hamilton, though tough in his youthful associates of half-breeds, had a fine, well-developed body, and he was not long in coming to his senses. Then Pelton joined the party, and, with all his fury and self-control he possessed, he took up the short stretcher that he worked with Nels. Thus they came to Skagway, and by the middle of the afternoon the steamer was ready to sail.

Pelton met the girls hand upon his arm and heard her crying in a hard, shaky voice:

"He needs kilbilla! Put him somewhere! He started opening his gentle heart, and saw the bathing in her face and the hands, of strange fervor as she took his eyes boldly.

"He don't know what he's doing, poor kid," she said through her short teeth. "He—But the bath worked in spite of no more.

Hamilton saw him coming and waved that frantically to all fours, then got on his feet and walked toward the men. As Pelton stretched him he cried out piteously, a shell of terror in his voice, and, falling to his knees, crowded out the hands of strange fervor as she took his eyes boldly.

"Oh, don't, don't, don't!"
